Dear Students and Parents,

I am excited to be joining the Saint George School family as a Third and Fourth Form English teacher. I've been an educator for over ten years, both in the Dominican Republic and the United States, and have had the pleasure of teaching at all levels, from primary school to college, though most of my experience is at the Upper School level.

I have always believed that a large part of my job as a teacher is to develop a good relationship with my students and their families in order to provide the support the students need to succeed educationally. Trust between the students and the teacher is essential for students to be motivated in school and to be positive risk takers in their education. My goal as a teacher is to help students feel comfortable and inspired to challenge themselves in their learning experience so that they can leave school prepared and excited about continuing to acquire a broad, lifelong education.

I believe that to be a good teacher, you need to continue to grow and develop, to have a passion for learning and to be enthusiastic and ambitious about continuing your studies. For this reason, I am open to all learning opportunities, including the ones my students provide every day, as I consider myself a perpetual student.

I received a B.A. from Hunter College/CUNY in Media Studies with a Minor in Sociology. I then went on to complete a Masters of Arts in Creative and Professional Writing and a Masters of Science in Secondary Education-English, both at Long Island University. My particular passion is writing and my students can expect a class that will be challenging and rigorous but with a lot of room for creativity, particularly in the area of writing.

I look forward to a wonderful year learning about each other, challenging ourselves to higher learning and producing some very interesting creative stories and essays.

Sincerely,

Ms. Sang
